ANZ Endowment Super provides investment and also life insurance cover within superannuation. It allows you to accumulate a lump sum value payable at a maturity date set at the commencement of the policy.

As ANZ Endowment Super policies are based on a set sum insured and acquire a 'surrender value' after an initial period, they have both savings and life insurance characteristics.

The underlying investment is capital guaranteed. No other investment options are offered.

Some policies receive additional value through annual bonus declarations. The bonus amounts are determined by the actuaries, and are applied as a percentage of the sum insured and any accumulated bonuses.

The benefit is paid in full on death or at the policy maturity date. On the maturity date shown on your Policy Schedule, you receive the sum insured amount plus any bonuses allocated, less any accumulated debts and taxes. Payment of this benefit then terminates the policy and no further benefits are payable.

If the policy is redeemed, rolled over or cancelled earlier, a lesser amount (surrender value) is payable.

The superannuation trustee purchases the policy from OnePath Life Limited (the Insurer). The trustee owns the policy, and your contributions pay the premiums (insurance fees) on the policy. You are the life insured under the policy.

Upon death, the agreed death sum insured plus any bonuses allocated, less any accumulated debts and taxes will be paid. This benefit is paid to the trustee who then transfers it to your beneficiary(s).

If outstanding premiums are not paid this creates an automatic loan (non-forfeiture loan) against your policy. Interest is then charged until the surrender value is exhausted. Policy loans are available to the member against the security of the policy up to 90% of the surrender value. Interest is then charged on the outstanding loan amount.
